Seaman's Club for the Sailors at Honolulu

INTERIOR VIEW OF THE BILLIARD ROOM.

No quasi public institution in Honolulu is accomplishing more good than the Seaman's Club, started last February by A. Frank Cooke as an experiment. This club, under the management of C. E. Smith, has become a stand-by among the seamen and the local citizens now wonder why it was not thought of before.

Located close to the water front, it is easy of access to any and all seafaring men, and that the club is well patronized is evidenced by the upwards of 3000 names now on the register.

The club has given an individuality to the sailors higher than the reputation gained from the unfortunate affairs that too often result from their not having a place to go. The club gives tone and character to the sailors and it could not have this character if the sailors as a class were not at heart pretty good citizens. When brought together and treated like men, sailors are by no means as bad as some people try to make them out.

The system on which the club is conducted is simple. The manager calls on board every ship on her arrival in port talks with the seamen and distributes circulars containing these suggestions:

IN GOD WE TRUST.

Hall, Corner of Nuuanu and Queen Streets, Up Stairs.

The Seaman's Club is now an assured success and a permanent institution of this port.

There is a reading room, with the use of piano and other musical instruments; also billiards, bagatelle, checkers, writing materials, etc., all of which is free to bona fide seamen.

There is a Free Library for the use of seamen visiting the Club. Amateur entertainments are given when talent is available. Any friends amongst the seafaring men who can assist in the vocal or instrumental line or give recitations, will confer a favor on the management by signifying their desire to take part in the program.

The manager will be pleased to give all desired information, and otherwise in any legitimate manner assist seamen to the best of his ability.

Religious song every Sunday evening from 6:30 till 7 o'clock.

A leading influence of this institution is the counteracting of the evil influences of the city.

NOTE:—A bona fide seaman is defined to be "any seaman serving on the articles of a vessel lying in this port."

The seamen do the rest. They have free use of the rooms to go and come, attend services, smoke, play games as suits their pleasure.

The manager of the club in a conversation with a Bulletin reporter, gave the following as his opinion of the sailor and his needs:

"The success of the club proves conclusively that seafaring men, can be reached, mentally and socially, by ordinary means. Simplicity and naturalness appeal to the seamen as to no other class of men.

"The need of the hour in Honolulu is larger quarters with better ventilation. The work is in its infancy. What the Y. M. C. A. is to the civilian, the institute should be to the sailor. Jack is sensitive and prefers mating with his own class, and even in worship, prefers the Seamen's Bethel to the most stately church edifice.

"The need of a place ashore where the sailor could rest at night in a quiet mosquito proof room, is evident to any who know of the contraction of the forecastle bunk, where the song of the mosquito is as a siren song.

"Jack is willing to pay for this room. Working hard all day, and being annoyed all night, leaves the sailor in a poor plight for his daily toil.

"The commercial expansion of the merchant marine of Honolulu is assured; the port is growing in importance and soon the entries will be doubled. The opening here for philanthropic and humanitarian effort is wide, and now is the time to lay broad foundations for present and future billings.

"The citizens of Honolulu are generous and willingly aid anything looking like a better opportunity could be desired than this, which is now offered for the betterment of the men who go down to the sea in ships."

"The sailor leaves his home port, intending to return, when his voyages are ended, and in some domestic 'Black Home' end his days. To aid the sailor or to save his hard earnings is to aid in bringing about this result.

"A great number of desertions are said to be owing to the advance of allotments to the crews. This, by the way, is an evil that has been corrected in part by the recent United States law. It will be remembered, some eight or nine months ago, considerable discussion took place in the British House of Commons over the question of desertions among the crews of British ships, numbering over 14,000 per annum. The result was a request made at the instance of Admiral Field, M. P., for information on the subject from Consuls and Colonial officers at a number of ports, sixteen in all. The results have been published in a blue book, just to hand. The substance of the consular reports at Pacific coast ports is that the main cause is dissatisfaction in the vessels and long spells in port, during which the crews are paid practically without money.

"The Germans and Scandinavians as a rule stay by their ships until they return home and are encouragers of the work. The greatest enemies the Seamen's Friends' Society has to work against is the crimp and shipping masters and boarding house keepers and runners, who handle the sailor for their special benefit and have been the cause of degrading the sailor in the eyes of the landsman."
